Aid for Girls from Foreign Lands, In Strange City

Travelers' Aid Worker at Union Depot Helps Girls Every Day, Many of Whom Might Be Enticed Away if Not Looked After.

THROUGH the establishment of a traveler's aid, the Y. W. C. A. of Texas has built a fence around the pitfalls that threaten immigrant and other girls traveling alone in this country. El Paso is doing its part in this work and doing it well.

At the union station is Miss R. Gilbert, an elderly woman with hair that has been touched with silver and a face that shines with kindness and earnestness in the work. Cheerfully she goes about her daily labor of love, guiding the steps of the girls who stop here or pass through on their way east or west. Most of them go west. She is interested in her work for it is interesting work, a life work of looking to the interests of others. For a year she has been stationed at the depot, where men and women of every nation pass through the doors. During that year she has cared for 1000 girls who might have been led astray.

Miss Gilbert likes her work and loves the children she guides and guards.

Immigrants From Everywhere.

"Most of my work is among the immigrant girls," she said. "They come from everywhere. Every nation is represented and their ages range from 14 years up. Occasionally there is one younger even than that. But in using the age 14 I recall a little Finnish girl who came all the way from her home country alone. She was labeled and banded for San Francisco. Many of the girls cannot speak English. Fortunately I speak a little French and German and I am enabled to help these girls along.

"They are confiding, and, through sign language, I am able to make them understand just what I am here for. I help them with their tickets, see that they get their meals and if they are compelled to stay over night, I take them some place where they will be well protected. It is necessary to look after them while they wait in the station between trains.

"There were two French girls here recently. They could not speak any English but on the train a man had tried to get them to go to restaurant with him. They explained it all to me in French. They withstood his efforts to get them to go with him and they were glad after I had talked with them.

Going to San Francisco.

"Most of these immigrant girls go to San Francisco or up into the northwest. There are many of them that are orphans who come over here to relatives. Others have a father or perhaps both parents in this country. The girls have been left behind until such time as the father could make sufficient money to send for them. Then they come over.

"Some of them have letters from the travelers' aid societies in other lands. To others I give letters so that they will be cared for and protected on their journeys. Most of them come through from New Orleans. The Southern Pacific railroad maintains agencies in Europe and sells tickets direct from those points to California and the northwest. That is why they come this way. At New Orleans the travelers' aid cares for them and gives them letters. They always are glad to receive advice I can give them and they appreciate it.

When Girls Are Robbed.

"Occasionally, a girl will come who, on account of her confidence in people, has been robbed of her money and ticket. If the money loss is small, I make it up out of what I have. If it is too great for me to give, I refer them to the Woman's Charity association and they are properly cared for. "We see but few Italian girls. Very few of them travel alone. One fine day, many Russians, too, and a few Hindu, but they are always in groups and there are nearly always men with them who look after them. The most independent of all are the Irish girls. With their pleasant smiles and a touch of the blarney on the end of their tongues, they are engaging persons and most likeable. Some of them bring their brogues with them, where educated in English convents, have no brogue at all.

An Irish Girl's Case.

"One of the most interesting cases I remember was that of an Irish girl. She was but 18 or so and as happy as a lark. I asked her why she had come to this country and she said: 'Sure an' my family for generations and generations worked in a factory. I saw nothin' ahead of me but that. I didn't want to work in a factory, America is where a girl can help her family. I wanted to come to America. My uncle lives in San Francisco. He owns a confectionery store there and he offered me a place. So I kissed my father an' mother good-bye and came. Will they come later, did you ask? Sure an' I don't know. They are getting mighty old and it's a bit hard to say if they'd travel way over here. But, I just couldn't work any more in that factory. I had to come over here where Iverlyman is good to you and helping you up to something better."

Help From Station Men.

"The men about the station are interested in this work, too," continued Miss Gilbert. "They want to help along. They come to me often to offer their services. I remember many cases where they have done so but I will just tell you of one. There was a poor Mexican woman here with two children. Not a bite of breakfast did they have. They wanted to get to Sierra Blanca, so I bought their ticket and was taking them in to get some breakfast when John Morahan, one of the men here at the station, stopped me. 'No,' he said; 'You buy their tickets and I will buy their breakfast,' and he whisked them away into the restaurant and bought them something to eat while I was getting the ticket. "They are all alike, these men that work here. They are all ready and willing to help when they think it is right and they have done much to help me in this work."

Your Wife's Future

Is probably assured if you live. BUT—suppose you don't! Ever think of that? The safest way is to secure a policy in a good strong company while you are well—then place it beside her plate some night and watch her face when you say: "This, dear, is for you in case the unexpected happens to me—as it may." Don't wait for her to ask you to do it, though—for that's a mighty delicate position to put her in!

Select a strong company with ample assets, a long record of efficiency, and a policy which costs less the longer you have it—the Union Central Life kind. Don't experiment. No other is "just as good." Remember that! The Union Central is nearly 50 years old—pays highest annual dividends to its policyholders—has over Ninety-three million dollars assets—and the lowest net cost record the world over. Make me prove it!
